FOREWORD

"Are these all pictures painted from nature?" said the old fashioned lady, in the old fashioned skirt, while visiting the combined exhibition of the Water Color Societies.

"Well, I'm not surprised," she continued. "They are not nearly as clear as if they were copied from prints. I suppose this is meant for a picture of roses, but I'd hardly know they were flowers."

"When I was a girl I did better ones from prints, but fashions have changed. Now my daughter goes out sketching with a real artist, and my goodness gracious! I can't make head or tail of her pictures,—blobs of color, splashes—and you have no idea what rough water-color paper she uses."

"Well, now you make me stand off here those roses do look beautiful, only I can't see the veins in the leaves. If they had been photographed I should have seen the veins in the leaves you know."

"Daughter says I should try and see broad, and she says Cubism is the highest form of art. May be that's why most sky-scrapers are square, for she says the sky-scraper is America's most original contribution to art."

"It's queer how real those roses begin to seem to me at a little distance; I can almost smell them."

"I guess they would look well on my parlor walls, and you would have to stand mighty close to find out there were no veins in the leaves."

"Did you say the picture cost $500—? That's cheap, roses being so high priced these days; but the picture is one of the dearest here, so I reckon you think it the best—I'll take it, I like the crackle on the jar.

*Through years of existence, organizations, like works of Art,
take on added virtues*

IN 1870 the House of Devoe brought 116 years of paint experience to the manufacture of artists' colors,—experience that covered every phase of mechanical excellence in the manufacture of mixed paint:—an organization capable of assembling from worldwide sources the pigments best suited to artists' uses.

What then, are the added virtues of years. Just these—a sincere recognition of the problems that confront every artist, and an acknowledged responsibility to provide him with those materials only that will most satisfactorily fill his own rigid requirements.
